SPOTLIGHT 2001: ACADIA NATIONAL PARK, MAINE

"The winds will blow their own freshness into you... while cares will drop off like autumn leaves." — John Muir

Behold beautiful Acadia National Park — waves crashing against Maine's rocky shore, enchanting broken stone carriage roads, red spruce to blueberries and the mighty peregrine falcon. Among 46,000 acres is Cadillac Mountain, where you can be first to see the sunrise in America. Wrought by nature, endowed and maintained by friends from all walks of life, Acadia was founded in 1919. With your annual National Parks Pass, you're part of Acadia's wondrous story.

Your Fees at Work

More than 80% of Pass revenue goes straight into vital park programs. These programs help to

- protect wildlife such as grizzly bears and wolves in Yellowstone.
- develop, maintain and improve visitor services such as restoring the footpaths in Acadia.
- support educational programs in and out of the classroom for thousands of children, as well as numerous other science and conservation projects.

Let the Parks Visit Your Community

The National Park Service cares for America's National Parks and assists our communities – by working with local groups to design and build community parks, trails and bike paths; and by educating children in parks and classrooms. Through its National Register of Historic Places and other preservation programs, the National Park Service works with organizations nationwide to help protect America's history and heritage.
