Preservation recommended

This cabin was originally a simple log structure, roughly 25' x 18'. Around 1930 a wooden lean-to was added at the back of the house. Still later a shed-like board and batten structure about 10' x 18' was attached to the northwest corner of the building.

The original log structure was chinked with adobe, and a stone fireplace and chimney was at the south end of the log cabin.

Today most of the logs comprising the cabin are solid. The lean-to is covered with asphalt shingles, as is the roof of the total structure.

A front porch, with cement floor, extends the length of the log portion.

The inside of the log portion is divided into two rooms, while the lean-to has three compartments. The floor is of wood, and the walls are covered with plywood sheets painted white.

The cabin, recently acquired from its former owners, is used today for storage.

Surrounding the cabin is a cleared acreage where Stafford grew his produce. An irrigation ditch ran from Silver Spur Spring to the garden area. Portions of that ditch now just a depression in the ground, can be seen at the edge of the clearing, several hundred feet to the south of the cabin.

Boundary: The historic lands embraced in this site include a square formed by extending a line from the cabin 200 feet to the north, one 200 feet to the east, one 200 feet to the south, and another line 200 feet to the west.

Class VI land: 3.6 acres

Estimated cost: $22,000
3rd Order

This cabin was reputedly built in 1879 by Hughes Stafford. In time Stafford started a truck garden in the plot of ground surrounding the cabin, selling vegetables and fruit to Fort Bowie in the 1890s. For some years he also sold his produce to people of the vicinity.

Stafford continued to live in the cabin until 1913.

This cabin is one of the earliest settlement sites in this section, and it is the best preserved one. Moreover, it has a significant place in the agricultural history of the area.

A more detailed history of the structure and farm will not be known until a historic structure report is prepared.
