The History of the Spruce Mill

In 1917, as the United States was entering World War I, the Allies were in dire need of raw material to build airplanes. The Sitka spruce trees of the Pacific Northwest were ideal for airplane manufacturing, but the lumber industry had ground to a halt due to labor strikes. To ensure that the Allies had the wood they needed, the US Army nationalized the lumber industry under the supervision of the newly-created Spruce Production Division.

At Vancouver, where this summer’s Public Archaeology Field School will be excavating, a massive Spruce Mill was built to process wood brought in from logging camps throughout Oregon and Washington. At its peak, this mill produced 1 million board feet of lumber a day, which was used to build thousands of American, French, British, and Italian airplanes.

One of the unique aspects of this field school is that the dig site is open to the public. Visitors are welcome to talk with National Park Service archaeologists and students about their findings, or just watch the dig as it progresses. The heritage we uncover as archaeologists in this national park belongs to everyone, and we encourage field school students to learn and practice the skill of interpreting their work to the public.

The dig site will be open 9:00 am to 4:00 pm, Tuesday through Saturday, June 23 to July 25.

Celebrating the Centennial of the National Park Service

2016 marks a very important year for the National Park Service - our 100th birthday! National parks throughout the nation, including Fort Vancouver National Historic Site, will be celebrating this year and next with exciting events, programs, and through our social media sites. The National Park Service is responsible for the care and protection of this country’s most special places. Since 1916, it has been our mission to preserve these invaluable, irreplaceable resources for generations to come.

Throughout the late 19th and early 20th centuries, Americans became increasingly interested in protecting and preserving the natural and cultural wonders of this country. To do this, these special places were set aside as public lands, rather than private. The world’s first national park, managed by the Department of the Interior, was Yellowstone National Park, created in 1872.

By 1916, the Department of the Interior was responsible for 14 national parks and 21 national monuments – including local favorites like Mount Rainier National Park and Crater Lake National Park – but had no agency to manage them. Instead, US Army troops patrolled the parks, and civilians administered them. This left our national parks vulnerable to mismanagement and competing interests, including developers. In 1913, conservationists were outraged when a dam converted Yosemite’s Hetch Hetchy Valley into a reservoir. National park advocates used this example and outrage to persuade Congress that an agency to govern and protect the parks must be created.

On August 25, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson approved legislation creating the National Park Service. Over the past 99 years, the national park system has grown to care for 407 national parks, historic sites, monuments, trails, seashores, heritage areas, and landmarks. Fort Vancouver joined the national park system as a national monument in 1948, and became a national historic site in 1966.

Blast to the Past with Historic Weapons Programs

AT FORT VANCOUVER NHS, Historic Weapons Programs let visitors experience technology used in the eras of the British fur trade and the US Army throughout the Pacific Northwest.

Every Saturday at 1:00 pm, from July 11th through September 5th, costumed staff and volunteers will demonstrate the loading and firing of black powder weaponry. The program will alternate every week between demonstrations of fur trade era and nineteenth century Army technology, with the fur trade era demonstrations taking place inside the reconstructed fort and the Army era programs taking place on the Parade Ground. Weapons demonstrated from the fur trade era include flintlock muzzle-loading muskets and swivel guns, while the Army era is represented by muzzle- and breech-loading rifles, cartridge revolvers, and a mountain howitzer.

This popular event helps you to learn about the roles and characteristics of firearms and artillery on the far western frontier. Come see, hear, and smell a piece of our history - it’s a blast!

But it is not just park rangers who care for these places. Writer and historian Wallace Stegner called national parks “the best idea we ever had. Absolutely American, absolutely democratic, they reflect us at our best rather than our worst.” Our park staff work together with the American people to steward our parks into a great second century.

This year, join us for our initial Centennial-themed celebrations at Junior Ranger Day on Saturday, April 18, at National Get Outdoors Day on Saturday, June 13, and on August 25, when we will celebrate our 99th birthday.
