On December 21, 2006, President George W. Bush signed into law a bill that authorizes up to $38 million for the preservation and interpretation of confinement sites where Japanese Americans were detained during World War II. The law directs the National Park Service (NPS) to administer this grant program, once funds are available. Former internees, their families, and numerous Japanese American organizations and preservation groups were instrumental in the passage of P.L. 109-441, as well as in earlier efforts to preserve and interpret these important historic sites.

Preservation of Confinement Sites Continues to Resonate

The NPS first became involved in the identification, recognition and preservation of these confinement sites in the mid-1980’s to determine which sites would be suitable as a national park unit. In 1992, Congress directed the agency to conduct a thematic survey of sites associated with the confinement of Japanese Americans during World War II. The resulting publication of Confinement and Ethnicity and the completion of the thematic National Historic Landmarks study “Japanese Americans in World War II” provided a list of properties and a framework for evaluating related sites. Grassroots support for the preservation of these properties and for their recognition as sites of national significance led to the establishment of Manzanar National Historic Site—the first internment camp to become a unit of the NPS in 1992—followed by the establishment of Manzanita Internment National Monument in 2001. Groups committed to the preservation and interpretation of these sites also successfully pursued National Historic Landmark designation for Tule Lake, Topaz, Heart Mountain, Amache, Manzanar and Rohwer internment camps with assistance from the NPS. The NPS continues to provide preservation and interpretation assistance to these sites. As stewards of our nation’s history, the NPS recognizes the importance of preserving these sites and the stories of those who lived in the camps, and those who were affected by the actions of the federal government. The stories and constitutional issues associated with the confinement of Japanese Americans continue to resonate with the American public and inspire future generations.

Critical Involvement Sought

The NPS wants to ensure that all those interested in the preservation and interpretation of these sites are engaged in the development of this grant program. We welcome the opportunity to continue working with current partners, to hear from new voices, and to expand the capacity to tell those important American stories of resiliency, perseverance, equality and justice. We thank you for your interest and participation and look forward to working with you towards the preservation of these significant sites.

Seeking Public Comment

Through a series of public listening sessions, the NPS is seeking your comments to help us develop criteria for the grant program. We would like to hear your concerns and ideas, and meet with you to discuss guidelines for the new grant program, the eligibility requirements, and criteria that will be used to fund projects. Your involvement is critical to make this program successful.

PRESERVING THE PAST FOR THE FUTURE
The Secretary, after consultation with State, local, and tribal governments, other public entities, educational institutions, and private nonprofit organizations (including organizations involved in the preservation of historic confinement sites), shall develop criteria for making grants.

Grants will be given for the purposes of identifying, researching, evaluating, interpreting, preserving, restoring, repairing, and acquiring historic confinement sites, per the criteria developed by the Secretary of the Interior (through the NPS).

Historic confinement sites include Gila River (AZ), Granada (CO), Heart Mountain (WY), Jerome (AR), Manzanar (CA), Minidoka (ID), Poston (AZ), Rohwer (AR), Topaz (UT), Tule Lake (CA), and “other historically significant locations, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, where Japanese Americans were detained during World War II.” Please refer to the map below.

Provisions of this grant program may not place any constraints on private property.

Applicants must provide a dollar-for-dollar non-federal match for funds awarded in a grant.

The law authorizes the appropriation of up to $38 million for the grant program.

Key Provisions of Public Law 109-441

- Historic confinement sites include Gila River (AZ), Granada (CO), Heart Mountain (WY), Jerome (AR), Manzanar (CA), Minidoka (ID), Poston (AZ), Rohwer (AR), Topaz (UT), Tule Lake (CA), and “other historically significant locations, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, where Japanese Americans were detained during World War II.” Please refer to the map below.

- Provisions of this grant program may not place any constraints on private property.

- Applicants must provide a dollar-for-dollar non-federal match for funds awarded in a grant.

- The law authorizes the appropriation of up to $38 million for the grant program.
Developing Grant Criteria

Although the law provides guidance on who is eligible to apply and receive these grants, we are seeking your comments to help us develop grant criteria. Grant criteria will allow the proposals to be objectively reviewed so that funds can be used to address the most compelling and important confinement site issues.

These criteria also allow us to review proposals applying an open and transparent process, to evaluate the feasibility and effectiveness of the proposal. Establishing standards that all projects must address provides a solid foundation to achieve our mutual goals for preserving and interpreting these sites.

Here are some examples of general considerations that could be used to evaluate the proposals:

- How does this proposal preserve or improve the conditions of confinement site resources?
- How effectively does this program convey the stories of the confinement sites?
- Is there support from other partners or stakeholders for this confinement site project?
- Does the applicant demonstrate fiscal and project management capabilities?
