Keweenaw Seasons

IF YOU’RE LIKE MOST PEOPLE YOU’RE PROBABLY READING THIS article during a beautiful Copper Country summer month. Keweenaw National Historical Park and its 19 Heritage Sites typically receive the bulk of their visitors in July and August, when days are usually warm and sunny. The Copper Country is full of adventures waiting to be experienced during the summer. Have you ever wondered about the adventures that fall, winter, and spring have to offer?

Autumn may be one of the best times of year to be in the Copper Country. Many of the Keweenaw Heritage Sites are open through the fall, and their historic landscapes are transformed by the beauty of colorful fall foliage. Timing peak fall color tours can be tricky, but well worth the effort. Generally, late September to mid-October is the best time to plan a color tour. Many fall color tours, such as Brockway Mountain Drive or M-107 in the Porcupine Mountains, take you to the doorstep of several Keweenaw Heritage Sites.

Winter offers a tremendous array of activities, including the Hekinpaiva Mid-Winter Festival and Michigan Tech’s Winter Carnival. Cheer on the mushers and dogs racing in the Copper Dog 150, and check out the Great Bear Chase Nordic ski event. These events help you explore the enchanting winter season and the snow-blanketed landscape. Each of them provides a glimpse of local pride, strong sense of heritage and the fun spirit of the people who make the Copper Country their home.

Visitors who do their homework will find many of the Keweenaw Heritage Sites are open to the public in the winter, often by means of self-guided grounds tours. Popular winter activities include cross country skiing, snowshoeing and snowmobiling. Travel by snowmobile allows for much of the same access to sites as traveling by car does. All winter recreations ask to be extra mindful in the winter months of safety hazards and of protecting our treasured cultural resources. Deep snow often obscures holes, historic structures and artifacts, so please stay on designated trails.

Spring brings a lot of moisture to the Copper Country in the form of rain, but also as runoff from melting snow. The ground can be soggy and muddy. You’ll enjoy your visit much more if you come prepared with rain gear! Nonetheless, spring has lots to offer. Days get longer and warmer with temperatures reaching the 60s. Flowers start to bloom, and the bays and inlets of Lake Superior are freeing of ice.

No matter what time of year you find yourself in the Copper Country, be sure to include the Keweenaw Heritage Sites in your travel itinerary. Many people find it helpful to begin their visit with a stop at Keweenaw National Historical Park’s Calumet Visitor Center, located at 98 Fifth Street in downtown Calumet. The visitor center is open year round, and is staffed by National Park Service rangers who are able to help you plan your visit in any season.

Welcome to the Park Superintendent

Welcome to Keweenaw National Historical Park, one of 397 units in your National Park System. This year marks the park’s 20th anniversary. The park was established by an act of Congress signed by President George Bush on October 27, 1992, and our legislation charges us with telling the story of copper on the Keweenaw Peninsula and preserving associated historic structures, landscapes, and other resources. We in the National Park Service are proud to do this, along with our many important park partners. Our national parks protect some of the nation’s most treasured places and provide opportunities for meaningful experiences for our visitors. Keweenaw is one of those special places. In October 2011, we opened the Calumet Visitor Center which is the park’s first such facility. Make it a priority to stop and experience this wonderful building and its exhibits, and learn about our formal partners, the Keweenaw Heritage Sites. Talk with park staff to discover more about the park and how you can best experience it, and be sure to visit as many of the Heritage Sites as possible to experience the park most fully. Keweenaw NHP was engineered by park founders and Congress to operate based upon effective partnerships. The National Park Service works closely with many important partners, including the Keweenaw NHP Advisory Commission, the nineteen Heritage Sites, the Isle Royale and Keweenaw Parks Association, the National Parks of Lake Superior Foundation, local governments and organizations, and the community at large. We all work together to support this worthy preservation effort. If you are interested in learning more about our partnerships and how you can get involved, please visit our website at www.nps.gov/kewa. We hope your visit is rewarding. Experience the places, learn the stories, and share your discoveries with others.

Landscape Notes

Residents and repeat visitors to the Keweenaw Peninsula may have noticed something new on the landscape last year: park signs! Last spring, the National Park Service began installing distinctive brown and white signs to help visitors find their way to nineteen Keweenaw Heritage Sites. The Keweenaw Heritage Sites, each independently owned and operated, partner with Keweenaw National Historical Park to preserve Copper Country history and share it with visitors. Also completed were signs marking NPS-operated facilities, including the park’s new Visitor Center in Calumet, and the sign marking the Quincy Unit along US Highway 41, a twin to the one that has marked the Calumet Unit since 2009.

The sign project required years of planning, consulting, and design work. Not only did the signs have to meet Michigan Department of Transportation requirements, and have their locations approved by the Michigan State Historic Preservation Office, the signs needed to complement the NPS’s own nationwide sign program. Similarly, they needed to complement regional signage programs, including those maintained by the Copper Country National Byway, the Upper Peninsula Heritage Trail, and Keweenaw County’s distinctive branches. Furthermore, they had to meet the needs of each individual Keweenaw Heritage Site from Ontonagon to Copper Harbor, and be acceptable to local and county units of government. The signs were designed to help visitors identify the sites as partners in the Keweenaw Heritage Site network, and to encourage them to explore the history that each site preserves and interprets. Early reports indicate that the signs are making a difference, and that more people are indeed discovering the Keweenaw Heritage Sites that are on and off the beaten path!

Another landscape project is also underway: the Cultural Landscape report and environmental assessment (CLR/EA) for the park’s Calumet Unit. CLR/EA are NPS management documents that examine an area’s history, documenting significant periods of landscape change and informing landscape treatment. CLR/EA are prepared in consultation with park stakeholders, including local governments, partners organizations, and the public. They evaluate alternatives to help managers determine how to interpret resources to visitors while protecting and maintaining historic character. Calumet’s CLR/EA benefited from several meetings with community members over the winter, and the park expects the final report to be available this summer.

1907 Structures Get a Second Chance

THE CALUMET AND HICIA MINING COMPANY (C&H) AND THE VILLAGE OF RED JACKET (now Calumet) were both looking to the future in 1907. C&H was investing in new facilities to enhance copper production. Now, over one hundred years later, two buildings that embody that shared sense of optimism are being repaired with the assistance of the National Park Service (NPS) at Keweenaw National Historical Park.

Both buildings share a 1907 construction date, but each served very different purposes: the C&H pattern shop was a work place for carpenters who made wood patterns used in the production of cast iron foundry parts; the Paine Webber and Company office was a place of business for local investors and clients of the Boston-based brokerage firm.

Today, the pattern shop is home to the Coppertown Mining Museum, a Keweenaw Heritage Site. The existing gable roof has failed, and leaks threaten the museum’s collections and interior building debris, leaving the perimeter brick masonry walls. This $113,000 project will ensure building preservation and protect the valuable historical assets of this community-run Heritage Site.

Like the pattern shop, the single-story Paine Webber building on Fifth Street had roof issues, but they were not caught in time: in 2007, the roof collapsed. The Village of Calumet’s downtown development authority (DDA) purchased the property in order to save the rest of the structure. Since that time, the DDA has removed the majority of the interior building debris, leaving the perimeter brick masonry walls. This summer, the NPS work crews will repair damaged brick masonry and install a new flat roof. The DDA intends to sell the improved property to stimulate investment in the Village’s commercial district. Once repairs are complete, the Coppertown Mining Museum and Paine Webber building will join a list of other NPS stabilization projects. In the Calumet Unit, over fourteen structures have undergone roof replacement and repairs, including the Red Jacket Fire Hall, the Calumet Theatre, C&H Drill Shop, C&H Dry House No. 2, and the C&H Boiler House stack. In the Quincy Unit, the NPS has funded projects that have preserved over twenty partner-owned structures on both Quincy Hill and at the Quincy Smelting Works. As with these buildings, Coppertown and Paine Webber will have a new lease on life, and will continue to remind visitors and residents of the important connections between company and town, and employer and employee, in Michigan’s Copper Country.

Funding for both projects was provided by the NPS’s Historic Structure Stabilization fund source, which was established to help parks provide emergency stabilization to historically significant structures that are in danger of loss or impairment due to damage or deterioration. These funds can only be directed to resources owned by local units of government and not-for-profit organizations within park boundaries. This is a competitive fund source, too: these projects competed with similar projects submitted by the other 57 parks in the Midwest Region. NPS funding will be used to purchase the material needed for the new roofs, and also to hire the work crews to complete the projects. These crews consist of skilled carpenters, masons, and laborers that hail from the community.

Processing Copper - Mining for Words

Copper mining involved many more steps than just removing copper from the ground. For a company to be successful, over a dozen processes were involved in getting the copper to market. Find them in the puzzle below.
Visiting Quincy and Calumet

KEWEENAW NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK is made up of nineteen partner sites and two federally designated units—Quincy and Calumet—located at the sites of former large-scale copper mines. Most property within the units is privately owned. As the park continues to develop, additional services will become available.

CALUMET UNIT

The Calumet Unit of the park focuses on the preservation and interpretation of buildings and sites associated with the former Calumet & Hecla Copper Mining Company (C&H) and the Village of Calumet. C&H grew into the largest and most successful copper mining company in the Lake Superior region. The key to C&H's fortune was its location on the mineral-rich Calumet Conglomerate lode.

Located next to C&H's former mining operations is the Village of Calumet (once known as Red Jacket). Calumet's businesses, institutions and people were directly affected by C&H's fortunes. Though copper mining eventually ceased, many buildings and features from the heyday remain. The downtown was designated as a National Historic Landmark District in 1989. Several Keweenaw Heritage Sites are located in the Calumet Unit: the Keweenaw Heritage Center at St. Anne's, the Copperport Mining Museum, the Calumet Theatre, and the U.P. Firefighters Memorial Museum. The Italian Hall Site, scene of a December 24, 1913 tragedy, is also located in Calumet. Stop by the Calumet Visitor Center on Red Jacket Road for more information on visiting the park.

QUINCY UNIT

Within the Quincy Unit are former Quincy Mining Company properties, including mine shafts, hoist houses and the copper smelting complex on the shore of Portage Lake. Like Calumet, much of Quincy was designated a National Historic Landmark District in 1989. Quincy Mine Tours, a Keweenaw Heritage Site, provides guided tours of the underground mine and hoist house. Visitors can also explore the #2 shaft-rockhouse and many surface ruins. The National Park Service operates a seasonal information desk in the entryway to the gift shop.

Most property within the park boundary is privately owned. Please respect private property.

Become a Junior Ranger!

Children ages 8 and up are welcome to become Keweenaw National Historical Park Junior Rangers! Pick up a free book filled with fun and engaging activities from the:

- Calumet Visitor Center in Calumet
- Keweenaw National Historical Park Information Desk at Quincy Mine

After completing your book, bring it back to either location where a ranger will review your book and award you a badge and sticker!

You can also join a ranger for a guided Junior Ranger program with activities to help you complete those in the book. See the program listing to the left for details.

Interpretive Programs & Services

Calumet Walking Tour  Throughout the week - check with a ranger
Explore the industrial landscape, commercial district, and social history of a former mining town. The tour is on easy terrain and may be accessible with assistance. Meet the ranger across from park headquarters next to the statue on Red Jacket Road in Calumet (see map on page 7).

Quincy Ruins Walk  Throughout the week - check with a ranger
Join a ranger for a guided walk through the surface ruins of the former Quincy Mining Company. The tour is on varied terrain and not fully accessible. Meet in front of the Quincy Mine Gift Shop.

Junior Ranger Program  Throughout the week - check with a ranger
Join a ranger for this free and fun program as you explore new and interesting topics, play games, and work toward your Junior Ranger badge.

A complete listing of ranger programs can be found at the Calumet Visitor Center and Quincy Information Desk, or visit the park’s webpage at www.nps.gov/kewe. Also follow us at www.twitter.com/keweenawnp or at www.facebook.com/KeweenawNHP for the latest program information and updates. All programs are dependent upon staffing availability and weather.
