Pittsfield Reservation, Massachusetts

A waterfall so natural in appearance that it brooks denial of all artificiality. The small dam is naturalized with much greater success than the large one.

Palmetto State Park, Texas

Here are rock ledges in series that have but little trace of other than natural origin. The rock-edged banks are well contrived to tie in with the stepped breaks underlying the water course.

Boyle State Park, Arkansas

When the flow of water over a man-made waterfall promises to be meager, an arrangement of large rocks, between which the flow can be concentrated at a few points, is a good solution. This is much more effective than an attenuated dribble of water the entire length of the dam.
