This shelter is representative of a type widely distributed through our parks. With two fire places, enclosed ends and open sides, it is a very practical shelter arrangement. This particular example shown by the surrounding drawings is at Staunton River State Park, Virginia. It is illustrated at the top of the opposite page followed by a group representative of variations of this basic parti.