Maggie L. Walker National Historic Site Opens New Permanent Exhibits

Visitors to the Maggie L. Walker National Historic Site now need to schedule more time for their visit. On April 30, the park opened a new interpretive exhibit that was placed in the recently renovated buildings at 116 and 118 East Leigh Street.

Four rooms of displays communicate the full breadth of the Maggie Walker story from her family’s struggle for survival in post Civil War Richmond to her rise as the leader of the Independent Order of St. Luke. Mrs. Walker’s legacy as a civil rights activist for

Employee Profile: Patty Tremblay

Patty R. Tremblay is Richmond National Battlefield Park and Maggie L. Walker National Historic Site’s newest employee. She recently filled the position of Administrative Officer. Patty describes her job this way: “As Administrative Officer, I provide advice to managers and employees regarding administrative programs, and manage the budget and financial systems, human resources, acquisition, property, computers, telephones, central files, and other administrative matters.”

Patty wanted to work for the National Park Service even as a little girl after vacations with her mother to the big parks out West. It wasn’t until after she had worked as a civilian for the Air Force for a while that she was able to get her first “dream job” with the NPS, at Buffalo National River in Arkansas. “I worked temporary appointments with them off and on between 1982 to 1985 before finally landing a permanent appointment working in the Maintenance Division when the Maintenance Management System (MMS) was a brand new program. While there, I also had the jobs of Procurement Clerk, Receptionist, Secretary, and computer clerk. After trying on each of those jobs and working with such nice people, no other agency would ever measure up and I knew this would be my career choice.”

Since then Patty has worked at Jefferson National Expansion Memorial (the Arch) in St. Louis, Missouri; Allegheny Portage Railroad National Historic Site, in Cresson, Pennsylvania; and most recently at Colonial National Historical Park in Yorktown, Virginia. When asked where she sees herself in ten years, Patty replied, “Possibly retired or maybe still here if I’m having too much fun to leave.”

Patty was born in Santa Monica, California, which might put her on the map as the furthest from home at the park, and lived mostly in the Los Angeles area during her childhood. Her sister and Sickles’s Excelsior Brigade.

Preserving such historic ground is of course a mandatory step toward providing access and interpretation for those interested in the battle. In addition to learning about specific battlefield events and walking in the footsteps of soldiers, visitors to the site in the future will have new insight into the influence of the landscape and geography on the course of the battle. An example of this is the Poindexter Farm, site of a Confederate artillery strongpoint. Although that farm remains outside of the national park, that landmark is visible from the Buhrman property and for the first time will be visible to battlefield trampers, who will be able to better understand the Confederate attack plan, the Union response, and the development of the battle.

The addition of the Buhrman property gives the national park more than 1000 preserved acres of battlefield land at Malvern Hill.
