Narrative Description (Describe the historic and current condition of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

The Thayer Lake South Shelter Cabin is a three-sided Adirondack style recreation shelter. The cabin has a peeled log superstructure and shake walls and roof.

The building's present appearance matches its original appearance. The sill logs, not original, are rotten. When they sill logs were replaced, the rotten bottoms of the upright posts were simply cut off, lowering the shelter by about five inches. The roof and wall shakes are not original. The wall shakes, 25" long, overlap. The bottommost wall shakes are rotten. The front of the shelter does not have shakes protecting the ends of the horizontal poles used as nailers for the wall shakes. Recently, a painted box was installed by the U.S. Forest Service for a visitors' register. A fire ring is outside of the shelter.

The natural setting has not changed since the 1930s. The shelter looks out over a reedy tributary lake of Thayer Lake that is cut off from the main lake body by a substantial beaver dam. An block-and-tackle apparatus of unknown age is rigged to help lift canoes over the dam.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Explain the significance of the property on one or more continuation sheets.)

The Thayer Lake South Shelter Cabin is a three-sided Adirondack style shelter built by Civilian Conservation Corps workers for public recreation as part of the Admiralty Island Canoe Route. The natural environment is the same as it was during the 1930s. The U.S. Forest Service has maintained the shelter cabin and used materials similar to the originals when making repairs.
