Construction Begins on New Visitor Center

More than 100 people gathered at the historic site on Saturday, May 20 for the formal groundbreaking ceremony for the new Little Rock Central High School National Historic Site visitor center. Senator Mark Pryor, Congressman Vic Snyder, Little Rock Mayor Jim Dailey, and National Park Service Deputy Regional Director Dave Given all spoke. Two of the Little Rock Nine, Thelma Mothershed Wair and Elizabeth Eckford, also attended the event.

The City of Little Rock partnered with the NPS to sponsor the event, and used the occasion to begin the 500 day countdown until the 50th anniversary in 2007. As part of the ceremony, Howard Hurst, president of Tipton Hurst florists (the company that originally owned the property where the new facility will be constructed) donated 500 flowering plants to InnerCity Future Net, a neighborhood organization that works to transform vacant lots in the area into community garden spaces.

Actual construction began in mid-June and the formal dedication of the visitor center is scheduled for September 24, 2007, as part of the 50th anniversary commemoration events. Noacon, Inc., from Fairfield Bay, is the general contractor for construction of the 10,000 square foot building. In addition to serving as a visitor center, the facility will house the administrative offices for site staff and collections storage space for archives and artifacts. The restored Mobil Magnolia service station (the current visitor center) will remain operational as an education center.

The site's historian monitored the early stages of the construction project for possible archeological features on the site. Work uncovered a brick-lined well, as well as a concrete structure which may have served as part of an underground furnace housing for the greenhouses that formerly occupied the site. Both features were photographed and documented before work continued.

In addition to the building construction, design and fabrication of the facility's new interpretive exhibits is proceeding on schedule. Installation of the new exhibits is scheduled to begin in June 2007. The new visitor center will help accommodate the growing number of visitors who are interested in learning more about the Little Rock desegregation crisis and its role in the civil rights movements in the U.S. Visitation to the historic site has increased from 21,084 in 2001 (the year the NPS assumed operation of the visitor center) to 44,293 in 2005. The new facility will have about 3,000 square feet of exhibit space—almost six times the space available in the current facility.

50th Anniversary Just Around the Corner

September 2007 will be a very special time in Little Rock, as the city remembers and recognizes the people and events that placed the community at the center of one of the country's most important battles for equal rights. The highlight on the anniversary commemoration will be held on Tuesday, September 25, when citizens come together on the front lawn of Central High School to honor the Little Rock Nine. President Bush has been invited to speak at this event. All other living Presidents have been invited. This event is sponsored by Little Rock Mayor Jim Dailey's 50th anniversary commission. [Note that this event will be held the day after the dedication of the new visitor center.]

The 50th Anniversary Commission also is sponsoring several other events during the mid-September period, including judicial and education forums and a community festival to celebrate our common humanity. Many other institutions in Little Rock are also sponsoring events during this period. For example, the Clinton Presidential Center will be hosting an exhibit featuring the original Emancipation Proclamation. The Arkansas Repertory Theatre will premier a specially-commissioned play about the Central High crisis, and the Arkansas Art Center will host an exhibit of photography by Ernest Withers and Will Counts.

In addition to opening and dedicating the new visitor center, the National Park Service has many events scheduled to commemorate the 50th anniversary. Some of these events will begin as early as the autumn of 2006. Others will continue to be held well into 2008, recognizing other chapters of the desegregation story such as the Lost Year and the work of the Women's Emergency Committee. Some of the other events and programs that we are planning include a Democracy Center for students (in partnership with the Clinton Library) and a series of vignettes that will be aired on Arkansas Public Radio.

The National Park Service and United States Mint have also been working closely to develop the commemorative coin to honor the Little Rock Nine and Central High School. The coin, authorized by Public Law 109-146, is expected to become available in May 2007. A "first day of issue" event is expected to be held in Little Rock during the spring of 2007.

Please watch for future mailings for additional information about these and other anniversary programs and events and keep an eye on our website for updated information - www.nps.gov/chsc.

49th Anniversary Program

Mendez v. Westminster*: For all the Children / Para Todos Los Ninos A Story of School Desegregation Among Mexican Americans in California

Saturday, September 23, 2006 at 3:30 p.m.
Central High School National Historic Site, in conjunction with Unity in the Community: A Gateway for Humanity, will commemorate the 49th anniversary of the desegregation of Central High School with a special workshop and documentary screening. Join Sylvia Mendez, one of the plaintiffs of the Mendez v. Westminster case, and Sandra Robbie, the producer of “Mendez vs. Westminster: For all the Children / Para Todos Los Ninos,” a 27-minute documentary about school segregation among Mexican Americans in Orange County, California, for the program in the Central High School library. Teachers attending the event will receive inservice credit. The event is free and open to the public. Please call 501 -374- 1957 or visit our website at www.nps.gov/chsc for more information.

In 1954 the Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka Supreme Court case outlawed legal segregation in education. Seven years earlier, in 1946, Mendez et al. v. Westminster et al. set the precedent for the historic Brown v. Board decision.

The Mendez suit was filed against four California school districts by Latino parents seeking to end segregation in the schools there. The case was initiated by Gonzalo and Felicitas Mendez, who were tenant farmers in Westminster, Orange County. The Mendez family was upset to find out that they could not enroll their children in a school close to home because of their ethnicity. The Mendezes, and other Mexican American families, were also upset by the fact that many Mexican Americans fought and died in World War II along with white soldiers for the United States, yet their children were denied educational opportunities in the same country because of their ethnic origin.

Segregation in Orange County was not limited to schools. Similar to the treatment of African Americans in this era, Latinos were segregated and treated unequally. There was “Mexican housing,” “Mexican seats” in movie theaters, and “Mexican days” at the public swimming pools, usually on the day the pool was to be drained and cleaned.

The Mendez family, along with other concerned parents, decided to take action. They filed a class action lawsuit in 1945 in federal court against four Orange County school districts, seeking an injunction to end school segregation. With the legal guidance of Thurgood Marshall and other NAACP lawyers, they won their suit. Mexican American children could no longer be denied educational opportunities based on ethnic origin and were granted access to an equal education.

The Mendez case served as a precedent for the arguments in the Brown v. Board case. Thurgood Marshall and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund went on to fight many more civil rights cases in an effort to end segregation in education.

The Westminster School building is now used as a community service center. The building stands as a concrete symbol of the historic Mendez v. Westminster case that ended de jure, or legal, school segregation of Latinos in California’s public schools.

Ranger Recommendation

Debating the Civil Rights Movement, 1945-1968, by Steven F. Lawson and Charles Payne, contains two treatments of the Civil Rights Movement detailing different aspects of this turbulent time. Lawson depicts a more traditional view, largely highlighting the federal government's response and chronicling various stops along a timeline of sorts (including the crisis at Central High School). Payne's article challenges the traditional depiction of the Movement as one led by Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcolm X, maintaining that the real heroes of the Movement are those whose names often are not recorded in the annals of history, including women and students.

The ordinary people who laid their lives on the line for civil rights should not be forgotten. This volume also contains multiple primary sources, including speeches, congressional testimonies, and even some rare documents from civil rights groups in the South.

Education Corner

New Curriculum Available Featuring Central High School and Hoxie:

A new curriculum that focuses on the media's treatment of the Hoxie schools in 1955 and Little Rock Central High School in 1957 is now available. Funded by the Lower Mississippi Delta Initiative, a grant provided by the National Park Service, and written by John Way and Nick Adams of the Crossett schools, the curriculum includes a lesson plan, narrative on both the Hoxie and Central High School desegregation crisis, a CD-ROM featuring news articles, and a DVD of Hoxie: The First Stand, for use in the classroom.

Another collaborative effort between the education staff at the historic site and Little Rock Central High School 9th Grade Academy is "Liberty and Justice for All: Making Civil Rights Real in America. This curriculum unit, written by George West, Cynthia Mahomes, April Rike, and Chuck West, features activities that tie the Central High School desegregation crisis to all facets of American history, including the development of the U.S. Constitution, reform movements of the mid 19th century, and the post-Civil War era.

Also available for teachers is a new lesson plan on Dunbar Junior and Senior High School that narrates the history of this remarkable school for African Americans in Little Rock and Arkansas before integration. Teachers may request the curriculum units by calling the education specialist at (501) 374- 3067. Lesson plans also are available on the park website at www.nps.gov/chsc.

"From Central to History"

In commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the desegregation of Central High School, Little Rock Central High School National Historic Site partnered with KUAR Public Radio (89.1 FM), local NPR affiliate, to create one-minute radio vignettes highlighting stories of the 1957-'58 desegregation crisis at Central High School.

"From Central to History" features about forty vignettes of previously recorded sound bites from oral history interviews, as well as newly recorded material. The vignettes will air on KUAR from September 2006 and run through September 2007.

The vignettes will provide listeners with interesting and unique information from people who lived through the tumultuous times during the 1957 desegregation crisis at Central High School.

Staff from CHSC wrote the vignettes, and KUAR staff assisted in the production side of the project.

If you would like to be added to our mailing list, or for more information about the 50th Anniversary, please write 2125 Daisy Bates Dr., Little Rock, AR 72202 or email spirit_trickey@nps.gov or call 501-374- 1957.
