Narrative Description

The Moran Bay patrol cabin is located near the base of a steep hillslope near the mouth of North Moran Creek, on the north bank of Jackson Lake's Moran Bay. Used as one in a series of cabins to serve USFS (and, later, NPS) rangers on the winter patrol loop around the north end of the park, the site was a one-day hike from patrol cabins at both Leigh Lake to the south and Colter Canyon to the north. A dense pine and fir forest surrounds the building on three sides, leaving only the impressive view of Moran Bay to the south. Historically, rangers approached the cabin by trail from Leigh Lake. It is now also accessed by boat.

Statement of Integrity

Modifications to the cabin appear to be limited to the 1995 reconstruction of the front porch and the addition of a log staircase at the front of the building. These alterations are minor and do not disguise the building's association with federal Rustic architecture, as developed by the National Park Service and the United States Forest Service during the 1920s and 1930s.

Moran Bay Patrol Cabin (#46), constructed ca. 1932

The Moran Bay cabin is a rectangular, one-story, log building, constructed on a stone-pier foundation, overlooking Moran Bay on Jackson Lake. The corners of the building are joined with ventral saddle-notches. Log ends at the corners are cut to flare outward slightly at the bottom, and the exterior walls are daubed with cement mortar held in place with wood stops. The gable roof is covered with wood shingles, and features exposed log purlins and a metal stove pipe in the east slope.

8. Statement of Significance

Applicable National Register Criteria: A, CCriteria Considerations (Exceptions): N/ASignificant Person(s): N/ACultural Affiliation: N/AAreas of Significance: Conservation; ArchitecturePeriod(s) of Significance: ca. 1932-1948Significant Dates:*Architect/Builder: United States Forest Service

Narrative Statement of SignificanceSummary

Like the cabins at Upper Granite Canyon, Cascade Canyon, and Death Canyon, the Moran Bay Patrol Cabin is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under criteria A and C, for its association with Grand Teton National Park Administration and Development and its association with federal Rustic architecture. (Please see the Park Administration and Development Context, GRTE MPS, for a more complete discussion of the need for and characteristics of back country infrastructure.) The cabin's period of significance extends from construction ca. 1932 until the end of the historical period as defined by the National Register (1948), or until the cabin is no longer an important component of the park's backcountry administrative system. The interior contributes to the building's significance.

The Moran Bay Patrol Cabin appears to have been shared by various federal agencies. The cabin is located in an area that was administered by the US Forest Service from ca. 1905 until 1943. (Some park records indicate that CCC crews built the Moran Bay cabin however they also list the date of construction as 1932 - a year before the establishment of the CCC.) The building conforms to a standard design used widely by the Forest Service for backcountry cabins. In 1943, with the establishment of Grand Teton National Monument the NPS assumed administrative control for monument lands and the improvements located within them.

Although the NPS did not administer the area until 1943, the Moran Bay cabin is mentioned in GRTE management plans as early as 1938 (in which it is identified as a "snowshoe" cabin). Administrative trails linked Moran Bay cabin with other NPS and USFS backcountry infrastructure.

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundaries parallel the foundation line, 10' beyond the eave overhang. See attached site map.

Boundary Justification

These boundaries encompass only the cabin. The historic GRTE trail system, connecting front-country administrative facilities with the patrol-cabin loop, may be added to the site boundaries at a later date, creating a backcountry administration/tourist trail historic district.

7. Narrative Description, continued

On the south elevation, the roof extends past the front wall of the building to shelter a partially enclosed porch. A simple log truss (supported by three log columns) is exposed in the porch gable. The lower half of the east and west sides of the porch are enclosed with logs that tie into the vertical log columns; the porch has a split log floor. The porch is accessed via a newly constructed (1995) stairway with log railings and half-log stair treads. The entry to the building is offset west of center in the south wall sheltered by the porch, and contains a vertical-board door paired with a wood-frame screen door. A six-light fixed-sash window with plain board trim is located east of the entry.

The east elevation contains a six-light fixed-sash window, and the west elevation contains a six-light by six-light sliding-sash window. The north elevation contains no features. All of the windows in the building are fitted with bear barriers that consist of vertical metal bars interwoven with barbed wire.

Interior

This building has only one room. The log walls are chinked with split poles, and the log purlins and board sheathing of the roof are exposed. The cabin contains a newly varnished board floor. The window frames are painted white.
