Narrative Description

The Upper Granite Canyon patrol cabin is located in the extreme southwestern corner of Grand Teton National Park, deep in Granite Canyon, and northwest of Teton Village. The building sits on a small knoll immediately north of Granite Creek. The clearing is vegetated sparsely with native grasses and wildflowers, and is surrounded by a thick coniferous forest. Dense stands of trees block the view in all directions. The cabin is adjacent to the steep, narrow Granite Canyon Trail, approximately 100 yards west of the Granite Canyon/Rendezvous Pass trail junction, and seven trail miles from the Moose-to-Wilson Road.

Upper Granite Canyon Patrol Cabin (#55), constructed 1935

This is a simple one-story log building constructed on a log-sill foundation. Only a small wood-frame addition to the north elevation disrupts the nearly-square floorplan. The large (approximately 14" diameter) logs, harvested from the adjacent forest, are crudely dressed, saddle notched and feature chopper-cut (chevron) ends that extend 18"-24" beyond the notching. Pole stops secure mortar daubing. Logs are partially hewn, to accommodate the 6"-8" rough-cut door and window trim, and were once oiled; the oil finish remains only in the gable ends. Rolled roofing and new plywood sheeting cover the front-gable roof, which features wide (20") eaves, exposed chopper-cut log purlin ends, exposed flush-cut pole rafter ends, and a metal stove pipe located low in the west gable slope. (A 1968 file photo of the building shows board-and-batten roofing.)

The front (south) elevation contains a board-and-batten double-leaf door offset to the east; the door is trimmed with 8" boards cut into 3' lengths, presumably to fit a pack saddle for the long journey from the front country to the cabin site.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Although GRTE Fixed Property Records indicate that CCC crews constructed the Granite Canyon Patrol Cabin in 1935, as part of the larger backcountry trail/cabin network, cabin construction is not listed in landscape architect reports for the E.C.W. Fifth Period, May-October, 1935.¹ However, the chevron ends are typical of CCC construction; CCC crews from Camp NP-3 initiated construction of the Granite Canyon Trail during the Fifth Period (Project #29) and may have completed the cabin as part of that construction project. Like the cabins at Death Canyon, Cascade Canyon, and Moran Bay, the Upper Granite Canyon Patrol Cabin is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under criteria A and C, for its association with Grand Teton National Park Administration and Development and its association with NPS Rustic architecture. (Please see the Park Administration and Development Context, GRTE MPS, for a more complete discussion of the need for and characteristics of backcountry infrastructure.) The cabin's period of significance extends from construction in 1935 until the end of the historical period as defined by the National Register (1948), or until the cabin is no longer an important component of the park's backcountry administrative system. The interior contributes to the building's significance.

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundaries parallel the foundation of the barn, 10' beyond the eaveline. See attached site map.

Boundary Justification

These boundaries incorporate only the cabin. The historic GRTE trail system, connecting front-country administrative facilities with the patrol-cabin loop, may be added to the site boundaries at a later date, creating a backcountry administration/tourist trail historic district.

7. Narrative Description, continued

The door is secured to an interior Z-brace frame and features the original wrought-iron hardware. Large granite slabs form the door stoop and a standard NPS sign reading "Granite Canyon Forks Patrol Cabin" rests atop the door.

West elevation features are limited to a centered two-light fixed-sash window, covered with bear bars and framed with worn 6" butt-joint trim.

North elevation features are limited to a small wood-frame shed-roof addition, centered within the wall. The addition is sided with board-and-batten siding, stained dark brown. Features are limited to a three-quarter height board-and-batten door, centered in the north elevation.

There are no features in the east elevation.

Interior

Short (3') lengths of 8" boards (cut to fit a pack saddle) cover the floor of this one-room cabin. The southeast corner floorboards are badly buckled and the lower half of the double-leaf door no longer opens without great force). Walls are log, finished with split-pole chinking, and the ceiling is open, exposing log rafters, purlins, and the ridgepole. The window is trimmed with unfinished rough-cut 5" boards while the door is trimmed with 8" boards. The door latch, handle, and hinges are original. Fixed furnishings include a new plywood rodent-proof cupboard, the upper door of which is bottom hinged and folds down to form a table. Open shelving units line the walls and a wood burning stove is located along the west wall. Two coleman lanterns hang from ceiling hooks.
