Log construction set on raised post and rock foundation; rectangle (13' x 15'); 1 bay wide; 1-story; round logs (base log is hewn) with square hewn ends and square-notched corners; wood-shaked gable roof extended on north to form overhang (supported by plate log) and exposed 1/4-round log purlins; center wood door on north with c. 1930s hardware; stovepipe opening on north facade. Exterior features include square window openings (2' wide) on east, west and south (no sash) with hinged wooden shutters. Log widths range between 16"-20". This cabin was built by Leonard Bacon, an Indian who lived in Marblemount and logger by trade. The date of construction is unclear: a former USFS employee believes it was built in 1944-45, and another former employee claims 1920s. The USFS hired Bacon to construct the cabin. It was used periodically by USGS survey crews traveling through the area during the winter measuring snow depths. Maps show a structure located at Deer Lick site in 1936 and 1942 (Mt. Baker National Forest maps, USFS)			☒ CONTRIBUTING ☐ NON-CONTRIBUTING

It is one of the few intact log cabins in the area, and is associated with a well-known local resident. It possesses integrity of design, location, materials, workmanship, setting, feeling, and association.
