Register Cliff State Historic Site, located two miles southeast of Guernsey, is renowned as one of the finest "trail registers in the desert." Numerous emigrants etched their names, dates, places of origin, and messages into the soft sandstone cliffs, resembling a chalkboard. This landmark still retains much of its original appearance, as it did for pioneers on wagon trains heading west. During the height of westward migration in the 1840s and 1850s, Register Cliff served as a significant landmark along the California, Oregon, and Mormon trails. Positioned a day's journey west of Fort Laramie, it provided weary travelers a crucial stopover to set up camp, rest, and tend to their animals. Local rancher, Henry Frederick donated a portion of the site as a memorial to the pioneers in 1932.
