The 1991 RANGEROONS' Calendar

First NPS Director Stephen Mather and rangeroons in Yellowstone, 1926. Director Mather is holding an antler shed by one of the park's bull elk. When he has finished examining it, he will leave it where he found it. The rangeroons are holding tin cans discarded by careless park visitors. When the rangeroons are finished, they will pack them out and dispose of them properly. Rangeroons have been helping clean up Yellowstone ever since.

Children and rangers are the rangeroons' two favorite types of people. When rangers and children are together, rangeroons invariably show up too, which then attracts curious spectators. Three or more rangeroons together is called a rumpus of rangeroons.

In winter, rangeroons will reluctantly don clothing on the coldest of days so they can continue with their duties. Never vain about fashion, rangeroons will wear just about anything, much to the chagrin of primly uniformed rangers.

The Rangeroons' Calendar

The Rangeroons' Calendar

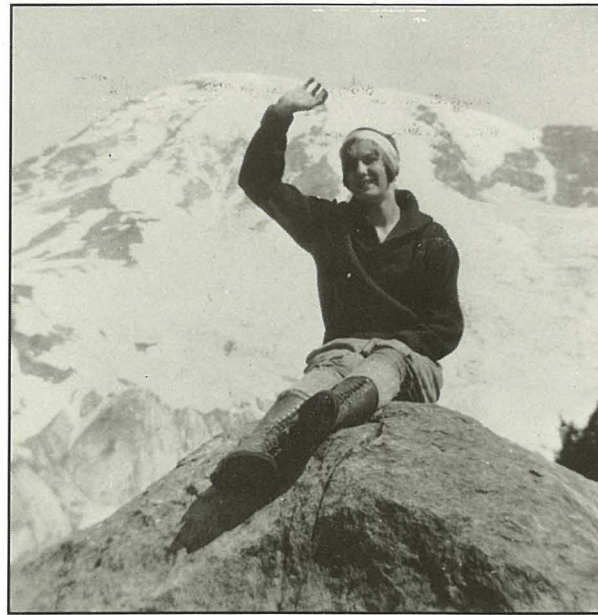

This calendar is dedicated to the memory of my mother, Alice Murdach Hoofnagle, 1914-1990.

She was a tender, cheerful person who encouraged me in my nature studies, artwork, and choice of a career with the National Park Service. We shared delight in comic operas, movies and classical music. We also shared concerns about the future of our planet. She laughed at my cartoons, loved Rangeroons, and was especially pleased when my artwork elicited controversy.

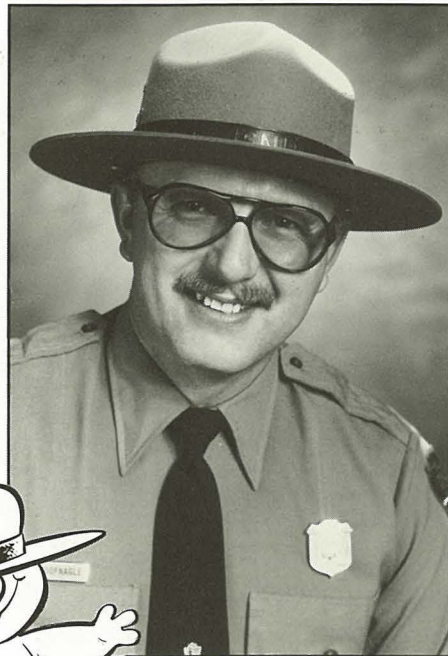

She now resides in "The land beyond beyond, the land past hope and fear." She would know the movie quote I am referring to. She was my very best friend.

Thanks to Bob Barbee, Ed Bovy, Glenn Clark, Tom Durant, Lorraine Mintzmeyer, Dave Nathanson, Tessy Shirakawa, and Bill Sontag for believing in Rangeroons.

Keith Hoofnagle and his Rangeroons have been known throughout the National Park Service for many years.

Rangeroons have been appearing in NPS employee publications since 1973. Although Rangeroons are very shy, the 75th anniversary of the National Park Service was an occasion that they could not overlook. This marks their first appearance in public and you can expect to see more of them in the future.

Keith is a career employee with the NPS and has served at Olympic, Saguaro, Yellowstone, Harper's Ferry, and Hawaii Volcanos. Currently he works for the Alaska Regional Office in Anchorage as an illustrator and visual information specialist.

Born and raised in Washington state, Keith's favorite park is Olympic, "but I've never been to a national park I didn't like," he quickly adds.

*All Good Wishes,
Keith D. Hoofnagle*

Who are the Rangeroons?

Park people have known about Rangeroons for a long, long time—since national parks began. Rangeroons are inquisitive little characters, pure of heart, shy and generally lovable. They're small, a little larger than a wood duck, and can be a nuisance when they get underfoot or remind us of things we would rather forget.

I've never actually met a Rangeroon, but I know they are there—just as Harvey was there for Elwood P. Dowd. They are imaginative characters, always showing up at the right time to lend a hand and to remind us what national parks and park people are all about.

They have a distinct dislike for bureaucracy and technology—making few concessions to either. They want to be near the real people where the real work is being done. They tend to avoid central offices, but I'm hoping they'll spend more time there because those folks need help too.

Rangeroons tend to be a bit shy around park visitors except for the children and are much more comfortable with rangers and other park employees. They are completely dedicated to national parks and the ideals parks represent. Recently they've broadened their interests to cover a host of environmental concerns including clean air, clean water, and recycling. They're not sure what all the talk about biodiversity is, but they're for that too.

Rangeroons have been in Yellowstone since 1872 when the world's first national park was created by an Act of Congress. Those of us who live in Yellowstone can't imagine what it would be like without them. I hope that when you're traveling in your national parks that you'll be on the lookout for Rangeroons. They are worth getting to know.
