Yellowstone Park

A Mountain Paradise For Motorists

IF you enjoy motoring on good roads, you'll like Yellowstone Park. Smooth as pavement, the oil-treated granite highways of the Yellowstone are as inviting and pleasant to drive over as any roads in this country. Mountain grades have been leveled, curves and straightaways widened. Now Yellowstone is ready for the automobile vacationists of the United States, Canada and Mexico. Come this summer. You'll be welcomed.

Look at any map of the United States. You will find Yellowstone National Park in northwestern Wyoming, amid high peaks of the Rocky Mountains. The Park overlaps Montana on the north and northwest and Idaho on the southwest. It is the largest of the national parks, enclosing 3,348 square miles of scenic natural wonders.

What's the best way to reach Yellowstone? Your automobile club, your gasoline-station man, or your stationer can supply you with a dependable road map right from your home city. Many hotels and chambers of commerce also distribute maps for tourists. State highway departments will coach you, if you wish. But it is hard to go wrong on the modern system of hard-surfaced highways leading to all important cities and tourist attractions in the nation. And the roads to Yellowstone are among the best—easy to find, easy to ride on. When you reach Yellowstone itself, you'll exclaim, "What a paradise for the motorist on vacation!"

Old Faithful Geyser has faithfully appeared in school books of the world for 65 years. Before that, civilized people did not believe a geyser could be possible. John Coulter's story of hot waters in Yellowstone was laughed at by the public of 1810. Jim Bridger's description of geysers in 1830 made a national reputation for him as a liar. Beginning after the Civil War, America started to admit that the wonders of Yellowstone really existed. Even today, many say "I'll believe when I see myself."

Come to Yellowstone—see for yourself!

Take Time to Ride in Yellowstone

Spend Your Vacation In Yellowstone

YELLOWSTONE is so crowded with amazing sights that ordinary vacationists hardly spare time to admire lakes of startling beauty, mountains that touch 10,000 feet, rivers that tumble in cataracts to the valleys. It takes a roaring mountain, a giant geyser, a mother bear and triplet cubs, a morning glory pool, a mud volcano or a steaming violent geyser basin to stir the special attention of the Yellowstone traveler after the first day or so of surprises.

As one of the most interesting and truly wonderful places in the United States to go, Yellowstone National Park justly deserves the affection of so many people who say "Every American should see and enjoy the Yellowstone." Bring your family this summer. Plan to stay a while—settle down at Grand Canyon, rest a few days and let the Canyon feed your mind and heart. Take a cabin at Yellowstone Lake—a magnificent body of water, with a shore line of 100 miles. Fish, row a boat, take a fast launch ride. Be sure to stay a few days at Old Faithful—inspect all the geyser basins, visit the Museum, let the youngsters do some horseback riding on dependable horses, with cowboy guides. Enjoy the dances and entertainments in Yellowstone every night. Attend the "Bear Shows" every day. Try the swimming pools. Relax and loaf at Fishing Bridge, Mammoth or Camp Roosevelt—there are so many places to stay, so many things to do that you will not want to hurry. You will find the new Mammoth cottages particularly comfortable and convenient for several days' stay.
